Dogs Hate Niggers – Oh Well!

Leftists masquerading as canine experts have actually been debating whether dogs can be racist. No seriously, this is a thing.

> The general consensus is that it's because the dog wasn't properly socialized as a puppy, and wasn't exposed to people of all races and ethnicities — or that the dog was abused by someone who "looked" a certain way.
>
> There are certain breeds of dogs that I've noticed don't see well at night, and react poorly to people with darker skin (day or night). I believe that with these dogs, there must be some vision problem, and if a person has slightly darker skin, it can seem as though they appear out of nowhere. Also, certain cultures and demographics don't have dogs as pets, or at least aren't as familiar and exposed to dogs as companion animals — and this can mean people from the islands or people from China, as examples. Dogs are not born racist. Some will however be reactive towards a certain "look" of people if they were not socialized properly to that "look" when they were pups and/or they have a bad experience with people that "look" a certain way.

Isn't it amazing that socialization is the culprit of all bigotries, real and imagined? It seems as though the natural mode of things is to discriminate, that is, to distinguish between this thing and that thing, and then to generalize for the sake of ease. If discrimination is not only everywhere and always, but inevitable and natural, why fight it? It is so exhausting having to train everyone and now every creature to believe in equality when we could just separate and save us all a headache and societal energy that goes nowhere. The answer is so easy as to be worthy of laughter, if the consequences weren't so absurd. So, for your kid's birthday buy them a dog…a racist one to be precise!
